Gib and cotter joint pdf file download full game

A gib is used along with the cotter to make this joint. the end of the cotter are made narrow to facilitate the hammering for fixing and removing. Usually the taper is 1 in 30. when a special arrangement like a set-screw is provided for keeping the cotter from slackening ,its taper may be as large as 1 in 7. Gib is likely a cotter but with two gib heads at its ends . Gib is like a cotter but with two gib heads at its ends . Dept., JU Cotter pulls the rod and socket tightly together Clearance: must be provided for adjustment.(2 to 3 mm) Proportions cotter thickness = $(1/3)$ diameter of rod cotter width = rod diameterCotter jointSleeve and cotter jointFor circular rodsThe enlarged ends of the rods butt against each other with a common sleeve over them The rod ends are enlarged to take care of the weakening effect caused by slotsCotter joint with a gib Gib and cotter joints are used for rods of square or rectangular cross section .the end of one rod fits the end of the other rod which is made in the form of a strap. This joint is not suitable where the member are subjected under rotation. The thickness of the gib and cotter are sameGib and cotter joint or rectangular rods Design of Machine Elements ITopic. Design of Cotter JointClass Teachers: Sanjib Kumar Acharyya and Tapan Kumar BarmanMechanical Engineering DepartmentJadavpur UniversitySA TKB Mech Engg. cotter joints are generally use to fasten rigidly two rod s which is subjected to tensile or compressive stress along their axes. Knuckle jointTwo or more rods subjected to tensile and compressive forces are fastened together Their axes are not in alignments but meet in a pointThe joint allows a small angular moment of one rod relative to anotherIt can be easily connected and disconnectedApplications: Elevator chains, valve rods, etcKnuckle jointKnuckle jointCotter joints A cotter joints is a flat wedge link piece of steel of rectangular cross section which is inserted through the rods at high angle to their axes .It is uniform in thickness but tapering in width , generally on one side only. Thus they differ from key joints which are used to fasten shaft and hubs subjected to tensional stress:Cotter jointCotter joints with socket and spigot endsfor circular barsSlots are wider than the cotter. The thickness of the gib and cotter are same.Gib and cotter joint for rectangular rodsOne bar end is made in the form of a strap A Gib is used along with the cotter. this joint is used to connect two circular rods.
